LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

The White House, March 25, 1986.

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate ratification, I transmit herewith the Treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama concerning the Treatment and Protection of Investments, with Agreed Minutes, signed October 27, 1982, at Washington. I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to this treaty.

This treaty is among the first six treaties to be transmitted to the Senate under the Bilateral Investment Treaty (BIT) program that I initiated in 1981. The BIT program is designed to encourage and protect U.S. investment in developing countries. The treaty is an integral part of U.S. efforts to encourage Panama and other governments to adopt macroeconomic and structural policies that will promote economic growth. It is also fully consistent with U.S. policy toward international investment. That policy holds that an open international investment system in which participants respond to market forces provides the best and most efficient mechanism to promote global economic development. A specific tenet, reflected in this treaty, is that U.S. direct investment abroad and foreign investment in the United States should receive fair, equitable and nondiscriminatory treatment. Under this treaty, the parties also agree to international law standards for expropriation and compensation; free financial transfers; and procedures, including international arbitration, for the settlement of investment disputes.

I recommend that the Senate consider this treaty as soon as possible, and give its advice and consent to ratification of the treaty with agreed minutes, at an early date.

RONALD REAGAN

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, February 20, 1986.

The PRESIDENT,

The White House.

THE PRESIDENT: I have the honor to submit to you the Treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama concerning the Treatment and Protection of Investments, with Agreed Minutes, signed at Washington, October 27, 1982. This treaty is among the first six treaties to be negotiated under the bilateral investment treaty (BIT) program which you initiated in 1981, Development of the BIT program and the negotiation of the individual treaties have been pursued by the Office of the United States Trade Representative and the Department of State with the active participation of the Department of Commerce and the U.S. Treasury, in conjunction with other interested U.S. Government agencies. I recommend that this treaty, as well as the others concluded with the Kingdom of Morocco, the Republic of Haiti, the Republic of Senegal, Republic of Turkey, and the Republic of Zaire, be transmitted to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification.

In 1981 you initiated the global bilateral investment treaty (BIT) program to encourage and protect U.S. investment in developing countries. By providing certain mutual guarantees and protection, a BIT creates a more stable and predictable legal framework for foreign investors in each of the treaty Parties. The negotiation of a series of bilateral treaties with interested countries establishes greater international discipline in the investment area.

The six treaties which have been signed as well as others under negotiation are an integral part of U.S. efforts to encourage other governments to adopt macroeconomic and structural policies that will promote economic growth. They are also fully consistent with your policy statement on international investment of September 1983, which states that international direct investment flows should be determined by private market forces and should receive fair, equitable and non-discriminatory treatment.

Our experience to date has shown that interested countries are willing to provide U.S. investors with significant investment guarantees and assurances as a way of inducing additional foreign investment. It is our policy to advise potential treaty partners that conclusion of a BIT with the United States is an important and favorable factor in the investment relationship, but does not in and of itself result in immediate increases in U.S. investment flows.

Congressional support for the BIT program is reflected in Section 601 (a) and (b) of the Foreign Assistance Act, as amended, in particular at Section 601(b ) which provides:

"In order to encourage and facilitate participation by private enterprise to the maximum extent practicable in achieving any of the purposes of this Act, the President shall . . . (3) accelerate a program of negotiating treaties for commerce and trade, including tax treaties, which shall, include provisions to encourage and facilitate the flow of private investment to, and its equitable investment in, friendly countries and areas participating in programs under this Act."

BITs are consistent in purpose with the network of treaties of Friendships, Commerce and Navigation (FCNs) which the United States negotiated from the early ears of the Republic until the last successful negotiations with Thailand and Togo in the late 1960s. They continue the U.S. policy of securing by agreement standards of equitable treatment and protection of U.S. citizens carrying on business abroad, and institutionalizing processes for the settlement of disputes between investors and host countries, and between governments. We expect that a series of bilateral treaties with interested countries will establish greater international discipline in the investment area.

The BIT was designed to protect investment not only by treaty but also by reinforcing traditional international legal principles and practice regarding foreign direct private investment. In pursuit of this objective, the model BIT adopts FCN language and concepts. Traditional FCN provisions granting rights which are not important to the typical U.S. investor were eliminated and replaced with more specific language concerning investment protection. Perhaps most significantly, the BIT goes beyond the traditional FCN to provide investor-host country arbitration in instances where an investment dispute arises.

Our BIT approach followed similar programs that had been undertaken with considerable success by a number of European countries, including the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom since the early 1960s. Indeed, our industrialized partners already have nearly two hundred BITS in force, primarily with developing countries. Our treaties, which draw upon language used in the U.S. FCN treaties as well as European counterparts, are more comprehensive and far-reaching than European BITS.

THE U.S.-PANAMANIAN TREATY

The treaty with Panama was negotiated by an inter-agency team led by officials from the Office of the United States Trade Representative and the Department of State. The treaty satisfies all four main BIT objectives:

--Foreign investors are to be accorded treatment in accordance with international law and are to be treated no less favorably than investors of the host country and no less favorably than investors of third countries, whichever is the most favorable treatment, ("national" and "most-favored-nation" treatment) subject to certain specified exceptions;

--International law standards shall apply to the expropriation of investments and to the payment of compensation for expropriation;

--Free transfers shall be afforded to funds associated with an investment into and out of the host country; and

--Procedures are to be established which allow an investor to take a dispute with a Party directly to binding third-party arbitration.

The provisions on treatment of foreign investment and arbitration, and in particular Panama's acceptance of international law as the governing law, mark an important achievement for the BIT program and our investment and international arbitration policies.

A technical memorandum explaining in detail the provisions of this treaty will be transmitted separately to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. That technical memorandum explains, clause by clause, the provisions of the treaty with Panama.

Some provisions of the treaty with Panama differ in minor respects from the U.S. model text. In general, however, the treaty closely follows the language contained in the U.S. negotiating model, the most significant provisions of which are as follows.

The model BIT's definition section clarifies terms such as "company of a Party" and "investment." The BIT concept of "investment" is broad and designed to be flexible; although numerous types of economic interests are enumerated, the intent is to include all legitimate interests in the territory of either Party, whether directly or indirectly controlled by nationals of the other, having economic value or "associated" with an investment. Protected "companies of a Party" are those incorporated or otherwise organized under the laws of a Party in which nationals of that Party have a substantial interest.

The model BIT accords the better of national or most-favored-nation (MFN) treatment to foreign investment, subject to each Party's exceptions which are listed in a separate Annex. The exceptions are designed to protect state regulatory interests and for the United States to accommodate the derogations from national treatment in state or federal law relating to such areas as air transport, shipping, banking, telecommunications, energy and power production, insurance, and from national and MFN treatment in the case of ownership of real property. Any future exceptions to these standards which a Party adopts are not to affect existing investments. The BIT also includes general treatment protections designed to be a guide to interpretation and application of the treaty. Thus, the Parties agree to accord investments "fair and equitable treatment" and "full protection and security" in no case "less than that required by international law." It specifically grants nationals of a Party the right to establish investments in the territory of the other Party, restricts the right to impose performance requirements, and obliges Parties to observe their contractual obligations with investors. The U.S. model also provides that nationals and companies of either Party shall in the territory of the other Party be permitted to employ professional, technical and managerial personnel of their choice regardless of nationality.

The model BIT also confers protection from unlawful interference of property interests and assures compensation in accordance with international law standards. It provides that any direct or indirect taking must be: for a public purpose; nondiscriminatory; accompanied by the payment of prompt, adequate and effective compensation; and in accordance with due process of law and the general standards of treatment discussed above. The BIT's definition of "expropriation" is broad and flexible; essentially "any measure" regardless of form, which has the effect of depriving an investor of his management, control or economic value in a project can constitute expropriation requiring compensation equal to the "fair market value." Such compensation, which "shall not reflect any reduction in such fair market value due to . . . the expropriatory action," must be "without delay," "effectively realizable," "freely transferable" and "bear current interest from the date of the expropriation at a rate equal to current international rates." The BIT grants the right to "prompt review" by the relevant judicial or administrative authorities in order to determine whether the compensation offered is consistent with these principles. It also extends national and MFN treatment to investors in cases of loss due to war or other civil disturbance. The BIT does not provide, however, a specific valuation method for compensating such losses.

The model BIT provides for free transfers "related to an investment," specifically of returns, compensation for expropriation, contract payments, proceeds from sale, and contributions to capital for maintenance or development of an investment. Such transfers are to be made in a "freely convertible currency at the prevailing market rate of exchange on the date of transfer with respect to spot transactions in the currency to be transferred." The model text recognizes that notwithstanding this guarantee Parties can maintain certain laws and regulations regarding transfers provided these are applied in a non-discriminatory fashion. In particular, the model BIT provides that Parties can require reports of currency transfers and impose income taxes by such means as a withholding tax on dividends.

The model BIT provides that where certain defined investment disputes arise between a Party and a national or company of the other Party, including disputes as to the interpretation of an investment agreement, and the dispute cannot be solved through negotiation, it may be submitted to arbitration in accordance with any dispute-settlement procedures to which the national or company and the host country have previously agreed. Unless the national or company has submitted the dispute to previously agreed dispute settlement procedures or to adjudication by domestic courts or other tribunals of the host country, the national or company may submit the dispute to the International Centre for the Settlement of Investment Disputes ("ICSID"). Exhaustion of local remedies is not required. In a separate provision, the BIT Parties also agree to grant nationals and companies of the other Party access to their domestic courts in order to assert claims and enforce rights with respect to investments.

The model BIT provides for state-to-state arbitration between the Parties in case of a dispute regarding the interpretation or application of the treaty. In the absence of an agreement that other rules apply, the BIT refers the Parties to specific procedural rules which must govern the arbitration. The BIT also outlines the procedures for the creation of the arbitral panel.

The model BIT exhorts Parties to apply their tax policies fairly and equitably.

Because the United States specifically addresses tax matters in tax treaties, the BIT generally excludes such matters. It also specifically limits the arbitration provisions to only certain taxation matters. Another BIT provision exempts disputes arising under Export-Import Bank programs, or other credit guarantee or insurance arrangements providing for alternative dispute settlement arrangements, from the standard BIT arbitration clauses. The model BIT also states that the treaty shall not derogate from any obligations that require more favorable treatment of investments and declares that the treaty shall not preclude measures necessary for public order or essential security interests. The model BIT enters into force 30 days after exchange of ratifications and continues in force for at least ten years. Thereafter, either Part, may terminate the treaty, subject to one year's written notice.

Each of these model provisions was developed after lengthy and extensive consultations within the U.S. Government and with the private sector. Nonetheless, in negotiating a particular treaty, the U.S. Government retains, of course, some flexibility to adopt modifications as necessary and in light of experience. While the U.S. model text has recently been simplified, the provisions summarized above have all been retained.

Some provisions of the treaty with Panama differ in minor respects from the U.S. model text, although none of the changes represent substantive departures from U.S. objectives. The more significant modifications are as follows:

(1) General treatment language-Article II of the Panama text provides for the standard general treatment contained in the U.S. model text, i.e., the better of national or MFN treatment. However, while the model BIT stipulates that conditions of "competitive equality" shall be maintained between private investments of one Party and host-country private and public-sector investments, the Panama text provides for "fair and equitable treatment" in such situations. (Article II, paragraph 3.)

(2) Performance requirements-Although Article II, paragraph x of the Panama text, like the model text, restricts the imposition of performance requirements, Panama noted its practice of granting benefits to investors under its "incentive laws when investments are "established." (Agreed Minutes, paragraph 2.)

(3) Employment laws-The Panama text, like the U.S. model states that nationals and companies of either Party may employ in the territory of the other Party top managerial personnel of their choice regardless of nationality. The hiring of other professional, technical and managerial personnel is, however, made "subject to the employment laws of each Party." (Article III, paragraph 2). The Parties agree to apply such laws "flexibly, taking into account inter alia, the nature of the investment, the requirements of the positions in question, and the availability of qualified nationals (Agreed Minutes, paragraph 3).

(4) Compensation for Requisitioning and Destruction of Property-The first model BIT would have obligated a Party which requisitions property or destroys property in non-combat situations to pay compensation. The Panama text omits this provision. The omission is not significant since these principles are already established under international law and the clause was omitted in its entirety from the revised model BIT.

(5) Requirement to make public all investment laws-Unlike the U.S. model text, the Panama text does not include any obligation to make public all laws, regulations, administrative practices and procedures affecting investments. Such a clause was deemed unnecessary since Panamanian laws have always been readily available.

(6) Compensation upon expropriation and transfers-The Panama text essentially adopts the U.S. model's definition of what constitutes a lawful expropriation but its elaboration of "adequate compensation," uses the term "full value" and not "fair market value," as used in the model. (Article IV, paragraph 1.) Given the other assurances contained in the Panama BIT, this difference is not substantive. The Panama text also specifically acknowledges that the estimate of the full value of an investment "can be made using several methods of calculation." (Agreed Minutes, paragraph 4.) This merely emphasizes an issue which is implicit in the U.S. model text. Concerning the payment of interest, the text does not specify that such payment be from the date of expropriation. Further, since Panama uses U.S. currency, there is no provision requiring that payments be freely transferable "at the market rate of exchange on the date of the expropriation." For the same reason, Article VI of the Panama text, on transfers, is much less specific than the U.S. model. The text asserts only that current and capital transactions shall remain "unrestricted" and "free".

(7) Dispute settlement-The Panama text refers to the possibility of recourse to the Inter-American Commercial Arbitration Commission as well as to the Additional Facility of ICSID. (Article VII, paragraph 2.) There is no equivalent to the U.S. model clause stating that where there is a choice between binding arbitration or conciliation between a host government and a national or company of the other Party, the opinion of the national or company prevails.

(8) General scope of treaty-The Panama text provides that the treaty will not apply to any existing dispute which predates the entry into force of the treaty, unless the dispute comes within the terms of Article IV ("expropriation") and does not predate ratification by more than three years. (Article XIII, paragraph 2.) (The United States is presently seeking clarification from the Government of Panama that for purposes of Article XIII, paragraph 2, "ratification" means the exchange of ratifications which triggers entry into force.) Like the U.S. model, the Panama text grants national and companies of either Party access to the other Party's domestic courts in order to bring claims and enforce rights related to investments. The Panama text confers this right by including it among a list of specified activities, including the making, performance and enforcement of contracts, which the Parties agree are activities "associated" with an investment and therefore entitled to treaty protection. (Article 11, paragraph 1.) This listing is included as part of the "Agreed Minutes" between the Parties. (Agreed Minutes, paragraph 1 (a-j).) These Minutes are meant to clarify the Parties' intent. They are integral parts of the Treaty. The fact that provisions are set apart in Agreed Minutes, rather than in the main text of the treaty, is of no legal significance.

(9) Exemptions from coverage-in the Annex to the Treaty, Panama exempts from the obligation to grant national treatment and the right of establishment communications, representation of foreign firms, distribution and sale of imported products, retail trade, insurance, state companies, private utility companies, energy production, practice of liberal professions, custom house brokers, banking, natural resources exploitation (including fisheries and hydroelectric power), and ownership of certain lands. Except for the ownership of real estate, investors must receive at least MFN treatment in all exempted sectors and matters.

(10) Clarification of public order exception-Because of political sensitivities in Panama, the Panamanians insisted on a separate exchange of notes (information copy attached) clarifying the standard provision in the BIT which exempts measures taken for public order. In these notes the Parties agree that this exception is not meant to authorize either Party to take such measures in the territory of the other.

(11) Applicability to political subdivisions-Article XII of the Panama text contains a clause from the model text providing that the substantive treaty obligations accepted by each Party equally apply to political subdivisions of the respective Parties. (This superfluous clause has been deleted from the later, simplified model BIT). The Agreed Minutes attempt to clarify this clause by providing that the treaty applies to states, territories, and possessions of the United States "wherever relevant." (Agreed Minutes, paragraph 6.) This clause was included to avoid the interpretation that the treaty binds U.S. states to procedural treaty obligations such as the duty to arbitrate or to engage in negotiations. Thus, in cases where a U.S. state violates the substantive obligations of the treaty, the U.S. Government, and not the respective state, is the proper Party in any subsequent arbitration, although the state in question will be bound by the result.

Submission of this treaty, together with the other five noted above, marks a significant development in our international investment policy. I join with the United States Trade Representative and other U.S. Government agencies in supporting these treaties and favor their approval by the Senate at an early date.

Respectfully submitted.

Each Party agrees to notify the other Party before or on the date of entry into force of this Treaty of all such laws and regulations of which it is aware. Moreover, each Party agrees to notify the other of any future exception with respect to the sectors or matters listed in the Annex, and to maintain the number of such exceptions to a minimum. Any exception, other than with respect to ownership of real property, shall be on a basis according treatment no less favorable than that accorded in like situations to investment, or associated activities, of nationals or companies of any third country. Moreover, any future exception by either Party shall not apply to investment of nationals or companies of the other Party existing in that sector at the time the exception becomes effective.

In no case shall such treatment differ from that provided to any privately owned or controlled investment of nationals or companies of the first Party which is also in competition with investment owned or controlled by the Party or its agencies or instrumentalities.

4. Neither Party shall impose performance requirements as a condition for the establishment of investment owned by nationals or companies of the other Party, which require or enforce commitments to export good produced, or which specify that goods or services must be purchased locally, or which impose any other similar requirements.

ARTICLE III

1. Subject to the laws relating to the entry and sojourn of aliens, nationals of either Party shall be permitted to enter and to remain in the territory of the other Party for the purpose of establishing, developing, directing, administering or advising on the operation of an investment to which they, or a company of the first Party that employs them, have committed or are in the process of committing a substantial amount of capital or other resources.

2. Nationals and companies of either Party, and companies which they own or control, shall be permitted to engage, within the territory of the other Party, top managerial personnel of their choice, regardless of nationality. Moreover, subject to the employment laws of each Party, nationals and companies of either Party shall be permitted to engage, within the territory of the other Party, professional, technical and managerial personnel of their choice, regardless of nationality, for the particular purpose of rendering professional, technical and managerial assistance necessary for the planning and operation of their investment.

ARTICLE IV

1. Investment of a national or a company of either Party shall not be expropriated, nationalized, or subjected to any other direct or indirect measure having an effect equivalent to expropriation of nationalization ("expropriation") in the territory of the other Party, except for a public or social purpose; in a non-discriminatory manner; upon payment of prompt, adequate and effective compensation; and in accordance with due process and the general principles of treatment laid down in Article II(2). Such compensation shall amount to the full value of the expropriated investment immediately before the expropriatory action became known; include interest at a commercially reasonable rate; be paid without delay; be effectively realizable; and be freely transferable.

2. Consistent with Article I(d), if either Party expropriates the investment of any company duly incorporated, constituted or otherwise duly organized in its territory, and if nationals or companies of the other Party, directly or indirectly, own, hold or have other rights with respect to the equity of such company, then the Party within whose territory the expropriation occurs shall ensure that such nationals or companies of the other Party receive compensation in accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraph.

ARTICLE V

ARTICLE VI

Each Party agrees, with respect to investments made within its territory by nationals or companies of the other Party, that current and capital transactions shall remain unrestricted and that payments and other transfers with respect to such transactions shall continue to be free.

ARTICLE VII

1. For purposes of this Article, an investment dispute is defined as a dispute involving: (a) the interpretation or application of an investment agreement between a Party and a national or company of the other Party; (b) the interpretation or application of any investment authorization granted by its foreign investment authority to such national or company; or (c) an alleged breach of any right conferred or created by this Treaty with respect to an investment.

2. In the event of an investment dispute between a Party and a national or company of the other Party with respect to an investment of such national or company in the territory of the first Party, the parties to the dispute shall initially seek to resolve it by consultation and negotiation. The parties may, upon the initiative of either of them and as a part of their consultation and negotiation, agree to rely upon non-binding, third-party procedures, such as the fact-finding facility available under the Rules of the Additional Facility ("Additional Facility") of the International Centre for the Settlement of Investment Disputes ("Centre"). If the dispute cannot be resolved through consultation and negotiation, then the dispute shall be submitted for settlement in accordance with the applicable dispute- settlement procedures upon which they have previously agreed. Such procedures may provide for recourse to international arbitration using a forum such as the Inter-American Commercial Arbitration Commission. With respect to expropriation by either Party, any dispute-settlement procedures specified in an investment agreement between such Party and such national or company shall remain binding and shall be enforceable in accordance with, inter alia, the terms of the investment agreement, relevant provisions of the domestic laws of such Party and treaties and other international agreements regarding enforcement of arbitral awards to which such Party has adhered.

3. (a) The national or company concerned may choose to consent in writing to the submission of the dispute to the Additional Facility for settlement, either by conciliation or binding arbitration, at any time after six months from the date upon which the dispute arose. Once the national or company concerned has so consented, either party to the dispute may institute proceedings before the Additional Facility, provided the dispute has not, for any reason, been submitted for resolution in accordance with any applicable dispute settlement procedures previously agreed to by the parties to the dispute, and the national or company concerned has not brought the dispute before the courts of justice, administrative tribunals or agencies of competent jurisdiction of either Party.

(b) Each Party hereby consents to the submission of an investment dispute to the Additional Facility for settlement by conciliation or binding arbitration.

(c) Conciliation or binding arbitration of such dispute shall be done in accordance with the provisions of the Regulations and Rules of the Additional Facility.

(d) Each Party shall provide for the enforcement within its territory of Additional Facility arbitral awards.

4. In any proceeding, judicial, arbitral or otherwise, concerning an investment dispute between it and a national or company of the other Party, a Party shall not assert, as a defense, counter claim, right of set off or otherwise, that the national or company concerned has received or will receive, pursuant to an insurance contract, indemnification or other compensation for all or part of its alleged damages from any third party whatsoever, whether public or private, including such other Party and its political subdivisions, agencies and instrumentalities.
